The Problem

Students struggle to stay focused and productive due to digital distractions, poor time management, and lack of accountability.

There is no all-in-one solution that helps students track their habits, manage their tasks, and stay motivated consistently.

Interview Insights

Key patterns identified across interviews and survey responses.

90%

Tried reducing distractions

Most participants had already experimented with Pomodoro, timetables, app blockers, or Digital Wellbeing.

76%

Study mainly near exams

Students usually begin studying only before examinations or depending on the subject.

67%

Existing methods don't last

Most productivity techniques only worked temporarily and failed to create long-term habits.

62%

Know what to study, but still procrastinate

Many students admitted that entertainment often wins despite knowing their academic priorities.

57%

Open entertainment apps automatically

Students frequently described checking Instagram or YouTube out of habit rather than intention.

48%

Want personalized guidance

Students preferred reminders, habit tracking, and an AI companion over strict app blocking.

In-depth Interviews

01

Can you tell me about your typical study routine?

02

When you have free time, what do you usually do first, and why?

03

When you open apps like YouTube, Instagram, or Telegram, is it a conscious decision or does it happen automatically?

04

Have you ever tried improving your study habits? If yes, what methods did you try?

05

Did those methods actually help in the long run? If not, why?

06

If you could design the perfect study companion, what features would it have?

Identified Lackings

Translating research findings into design opportunities.

> "I know I should study, but I always end up on Instagram."

Observed Issue

Students are aware of their academic priorities but struggle to resist digital distractions.

Identified Gap

There is no system that detects distraction patterns early and gently redirects students back to their goals.

> "Timetables work for a few days, then I stop following them."

Observed Issue

Most productivity techniques depend entirely on self-discipline and lose effectiveness over time.

Identified Gap

Students need adaptive planning that changes with their habits instead of fixed schedules.

> "I only realize how much time I've wasted after it's already gone."

Observed Issue

Students lack awareness of how much time is being consumed by entertainment apps.

Identified Gap

Existing tools don't provide real-time awareness before excessive screen time accumulates.

> "I wish someone reminded me why I started studying."

Observed Issue

Students quickly lose motivation and accountability when studying alone.

Identified Gap

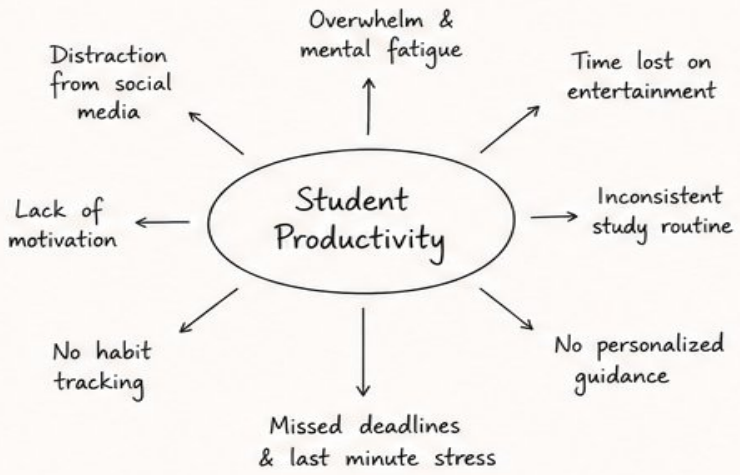

Current productivity apps rarely provide personalized encouragement or emotional support.

Ideation

Exploring multiple possibilities to design a solution that builds better study habits through awareness, guidance and motivation.

Brainstorming

Exploring problems, needs and opportunities.

Ideas Explored

- App blocker & website restriction
- Timetable & schedule planner
- Screen time tracker & analytics
- Study with friends / accountability partner
- Gamification & reward system
- AI mentor & personalized guidance

Core Idea

An AI companion that understands the student, creates personalized plans, tracks progress, and keeps them accountable with motivation and timely support.

- Understand habits and distraction patterns
- Create personalized study plans
- Track time, focus, and progress
- Smart reminders & deadline alerts
- Encouragement & accountability
- Celebrate achievements & unlock rewards

Design Goal

Help students build consistent study habits and achieve their academic goals with a supportive companion.

Design Principles Guiding Our Ideation

Personalized | Motivating | Focused | Supportive | Simple | Private & Safe

Solution

An AI-powered study companion designed to help students overcome distractions, build consistent habits,
and stay accountable throughout their academic journey.

NIRAN

NIRAN combines personalized planning, habit tracking, focus management, and AI guidance into a single experience.
Instead of simply blocking distractions, it understands students' routines, identifies unproductive patterns,
and provides timely support to help them stay on track.
